Riverwind, Earthcheck certification update:
Tim O’Donahue presented an overall summary of the Earthcheck audit conducted in September. Jackson received a bronze certification. O’Donahue sent the full report to Executive Director Sollitt if anyone would like to review all findings. In summary: Jackson is only out of compliance in 10 areas and we must meet three conditions outlined below by March 1st.
1). Policy on sustainability: town council approved unanimously, county will review in the next month.
2). The destination needs a monitoring reporting system on visitor satisfaction:
3). The community needs a destination action plan aka, community stewardship plan, or tourism management plan.
O’Donahue reported that 44 volunteers from the community were involved in the audit, (some present at todays meeting). In order to continue certification and compliance, Earthcheck requires $12,000 for an annual registration fee. Board will review funding request at the January meeting. Questions included, cost of DMP, (Sedona paid $140,000), who implements the action plan as a result of the DMP. Monay Olson, owner JH Lodging and Premier Green cleaning, who was part of the volunteer committee commented that it would great if Jackson was the first destination in US to achieve the gold certification. Sandy Shupertino commented that she was more interested in actually doing the necessary steps to achieve the standard, not just the standard itself. Jason Williams, owner Jackson Hole Safaris said it is a no-brainer as it would attract visitors who have a lighter touch on the environment and stay longer. Kelly French, Curbside recycling commented on how the process brought together many community groups already doing great work towards achieving a more sustainable community and brings together residents as well.
